

phrase-crediting as well as the peace. Ralph L. Peters, editor of the Sigma Delta Chi magazine, the Quill, relates that when the Germans summoned the so-called Lost Battalion of the 77th Division to surrender in the Argonne Forest on Oct. 7, 1918, Maj. Charles W. Whittlesey did not say, "Go to hell!" either orally or in writing. This is asserted by Wilbur Forrest, now assistant editor of the New York Herald Tribune, in his book, Behind the Front Page. Mr. Forrest was a correspondent with the AEF in that other war and ought to know.

Mr. Peters is authority for the information—useful information, I should say, and not widely possessed—that no one said, "Lafayette, we are here." He says, however, that General Pershing said it in substance. The general was credited with the phrase soon after July 4, 1917, when he spoke briefly before Lafayette's tomb at Picpus cemetery, in France. Again Wilbur Forrest, who stood within a few feet of the tomb at the ceremonies, is the eye-witness.

The set speech was made by Col. Charles E. Stanton, of West Virginia, AEF paymaster and a noted orator, to whom the Lafayette phrase sometimes is erroneously attributed. After Colonel Stanton spoke, a floral wreath was brought and General Pershing placed it upon the marble slab.

When the spectators demanded a speech, the general, who disliked making speeches, responded briefly. As Mr. Forrest tells it, the general "had not planned to speak and felt that everything had been already charmingly stated by Colonel Stanton. Then, taking a hitch on his nerves, he added that it was an inspiration to stand before the tomb of Lafayette."

"'We are here,' he concluded, expressing finality."

Let us look to our phrases jealously as the stuff of history. Let us have them straight in the light of truth. They are great enough to stand it.

melon vine in a flower bed on the parochial grounds. He covered the vine with flowers and no one knew it was there until he brought out a ripe watermelon from the center of the floral arrangement.

Over a period of ten years, one man estimates that from 100 tomato plants he has received 10 to 25 bushels of tomatoes each year.

The trick of the gardening trade which baffles the city farmer is that of making each cabbage plant produce two crops. Mr. Bastine stumbled onto that secret a number of years ago. Just before the first cabbage reaches maturity, he cuts off the head carefully and not too deeply. Later a second crop of small heads, some no larger than Brussels sprouts, grows on the original plant stalk. As many as 15 small cabbages have been grown on a single plant.

The project has succeeded largely because of the individual efforts of the gardeners. Sweat and tears were offered on the altar of sacrifice; the former given willingly by interested adults, the latter by youngsters taken from their play. Throughout the ten seasons, families have cooperated in the general program and with each other. Tools, seeds and recipes have been shared. Aside from physical and spiritual benefits derived from working harmoniously in the fresh air and sunshine, those 50 to 100 families have engaged in a semicooperative program which has paid enormous dividends.

Since this program exists by their efforts, it should not cease with the end of the war but live as long as people like fresh chard and beet tops.
